For its part, the Spanish minister explained that since "the military character and scale of the accident", investigations have been declared secret. Because of that, he added, can not overtake results. The causes of the accident are not yet known. In the accident investigation teams collaborate in the field of Spain, France, Italy and Greece. Also the French prosecutor has opened an investigation in addition to those undertaken by NATO and the Spanish Ministry of Defense. What is known so far is that the Greek plane was carrying extra fuel tank of a contaminant type, which is used to gain power if necessary.

This explains the large registered explosion, which fuel the five aircraft (three French and two Italians) who were waiting their turn to take off and against which the Greek fighter crashed. The nature of that extra fuel forced to decontaminate the area. Morenés called Tuesday's session "a day very sad for the Ministry of Defense and our NATO colleagues." The Minister expressed the solidarity of the Spanish people with France and noted that "what worries" now "is the evolution of the wounded" in its most favorable.
